

Break Free From Emotional Eating

1. Call Weight Loss 911 (figuratively speaking!). Call up a friend when you feel down instead of turning to a lifeless carton of ice cream, no matter what flavor. Ask someone to be your accountability partner.

2. Recognize the difference between physical hunger and emotional hunger.

Here's a great test for true hunger: do you want to eat snap peas, celery or broccoli? If the answer is no, you're probably just craving something sweet or salty to eat. If the answer is yes, then eat as many veggies as you like. You're really hungry!

3. Journal what you eat. For the next week, write down what you eat all day long. Look for patterns. Do you eat poorly at certain times of day? Maybe you overeat when you're alone. When you see negative patterns, start making some changes in those areas. For instance, if you're a late night snacker, brush your teeth at 8 pm and don't eat anything afterwards.

4. Look for comfort outside the kitchen. Relieve stress in your life by stretching or taking a walk in the park. Rent a chick-flick and have a good cry. Get a manicure. Listen to your favorite music CD. Think of things you enjoy doing that don't involve food.

5. Keep your perimeter secure. Don't allow unhealthy, high calorie foods into your kitchen. If your pantry is stocked with potato chips, cookies, cakes and sodas, you're asking for trouble. Save your treats for social events.

Emotional eating is a very hard habit to break, but it can be done. Some days, you'll do better than others. The key is to keep trying. There will come a day when you'll automatically turn to a friend instead of the pantry. When that happens, you'll know you've gained a weight loss victory!

Today's Action Step: Think about which one of these five steps you need the most. What's one positive thing you will do today in this area?

Arlene Pellicane is a speaker and author of 31 Days to a Happy Husband and 31 Days to a Younger You. She lives in San Diego, CA with her husband James and three kids. Visit Arlene for more free resources at www.ArlenePellicane.com